

Claims

The invention claimed is:

1. A method for providing error recovery in a data processing system which transfers message packets through communication adapters present on each end of a switched link and connected to 5 respective data processing nodes, said method comprising the steps of:

detecting corruption of a message packet transferred over said link; storing information concerning said corruption in a table within said adapter; and interrogating said table from the node to which said adapter is connected.